Empty land, full of plans: City unveils vacancy bill

A City Council committee gave preliminary approval to a bill that would start a city land bank. It will be introduced in council Thursday.

The bank would act as a clearinghouse for the 10,000 pieces of city-owned vacant land.

The bank would benefit residents, developers and leaders who find it difficult to navigate the myriad of city agencies that control real estate.

The plan is to fight blight, pump up the housing market and increase the city's population.

But ultimately, "the idea is to move it," said Councilman Bobby Henon, chair of the Committee on Public Property and Public Works that approved the bill.

If passed by the City Council, the legislation would establish an online database listing the available land, its price tag and history of the property.

"We didn't have a database before," Henon said. "So it wasn't up until last year that we even had an account of what we had. The departments didn't talk to each other."

Before a sale, the bank would require approval from the council and the city's vacant property review committee.

Andrew Sharp, a member of the Land Bank Alliance, said in March that "the land bank would create a transparent, accountable, predictable process for folks who want to invest in land and who want to rebuild neighborhoods."

Reading Relay. Philly students have books on the brain this week

Reading Relay, a national literacy campaign to bring reading to life and put books into the hands of underprivileged kids, is kicking off in Philadelphia Monday.

KPMG is visiting Russell Byers Charter School for its very first stop. The school will be transformed into a fantasy world of a classic storybook tale.

Volunteers and school officials will dress as storybook characters such as Dr. Seuss and Peter Rabbit. Kids will read and act out the stories along with the Phillie Phanatic and a local theater company.

KPMG will donate five brand new children's books to every student.

Spokespeople will talk about how early intervention in students' lives is the best way to beat illiteracy — especially for underprivileged students.

The group will visit 90 schools across the country in just four weeks. METRO

Delaware man busted for 11th DUI since 1987

For the eleventh time, a 77-year-old Delaware man has been arrested for driving under the influence, authorities said.

Ruppert Bell Jr.
DELAWARE STATE POLICE

Ruppert Bell Jr., of Bridgeville, was pulled over about 6:30 p.m. on Hastings Farm Road in his hometown Saturday after he was driving above the speed limit and swerving in and out of his lane, Delaware State Police said.

He was taken into custody after he failed a DUI test, state police said.

A computer check revealed Bell had 10 prior convictions for driving under the influence. He was first charged with DUI on Jan. 15, 1987. His last conviction was in 2005, records show.

He was charged with driving under the influence, driving while his license was suspended or revoked, and failure to remain in a single lane.

He is being held at Sussex Correctional in lieu of a $16,000 cash bond. TOMMY ROWAN

Police: Former coach charged with raping teen

The president of a Bucks County youth sports association was charged Friday with the alleged rape of a cheerleader over a two-year period starting at age 11, court records show.

Keith Peschen, 37, the current head and a former coach with the Levittown Lions Athletic Association, is accused of having sex with a female cheerleader starting when she was 11 years old.

Now 17, the girl reported her allegations to the Falls Township police department, which then opened an investigation into Peschen's past.

The girl said Peschen started sexually abusing her when she babysat his kids. According to the Bucks County Courier Times, authorities recorded conversations in which the victim confronted Peschen, and allegedly confessed to police.

Peschen is being held at Bucks County prison in lieu of $1 million bail.

Charges

- Rape of child
- Indecent assault person less than 13 years of age
- Aggravated indecent assault of a child
- Involuntary deviate sexual intercourse with a child
- Unlawful contact with a minor

SEPTA GM ANSWERS YOUR QUERIES

Would it be possible to run the longer accordion style buses on the Route 23 Germantown Avenue line instead of the smaller traditional transit buses, which aren't capable of handling the large volume of riders?
–HASSAN RIDA, GERMANTOWN

Since there are a limited number of "accordion style" articulated buses in the SEPTA fleet, SEPTA presently assigns them to routes with the heaviest ridership. We are currently in the process of replacing all of our 155 articulated buses. We are analyzing bus ridership to determine, contingent on funding, if we need to purchase an additional 25 to 30 units. Ridership figures for several routes, including Route 23, are under review.

Quoted

During the recession, I commuted to D.C. to work. Our MARC tickets were transferable on two Amtrak trains in the morning and three in the evening. Our monthly and weekly regional rail tickets enabled us to ride the buses with no extra charge. When will SEPTA become more commuter-friendly? –DARLENE JENNINGS

A cross-honoring agreement such as the one between MARC and Amtrak is typically entered into when the local transit agency is experiencing capacity issues and has insufficient train cars to handle demand. To ease passenger overcrowding, a local agency may request that Amtrak accept its passengers at select stations where Amtrak also provides service. The local agency compensates Amtrak for this supplemental service. In this region, the only stations served by both Amtrak and SEPTA are Trenton, Wilmington and a few stations on the Thorndale Line. SEPTA provides frequent service to these locations and is not experiencing the capacity constraints previously mentioned. Presently, a cross-honor agreement exists between SEPTA and Amtrak to provide transportation, at no additional cost, for Amtrak customers traveling on Regional Rail to/from 30th Street Station, Suburban Station and Market East Station.

Is it possible to change out the El's nasty fabric-covered seats for easily wiped-down plastic seats like on the BSL? –MELISSA BARROW, EAST PASSYUNK

The current seats on our Market-Frankford Line cars are inserts are made of a polyester blend. The cars and seats are housecleaned every day and detailed twice a month. If the seats or seat backs are soiled and cannot be brought up to standard, the seat insert is exchanged with a refurbished unit. I'm pleased to report that prototype composite plastic inserts — similar to the Broad Street Line's orange seats — are expected to be delivered in late November. The prototypes will be tested for "fit, form, color and function." If testing is satisfactory, over the next few years we will install the new plastic seating in all of the MFL cars until the entire fleet is completed.

Send your questions about SEPTA services and other issues about the transit agency to christina.paciolla@metro.us. They will be forwarded to Joe Casey, who will answer them in a special monthly column here.

Congressman: Note shows airport attack was planned mission

Shooter. The gunman faces a murder charge in the shooting death of a TSA agent at Los Angeles transit hub.

The suspected gunman in last week's deadly attack at Los Angeles International Airport wrote a note saying he intended to die after killing at least one security officer, the chairman of the House Committee on Homeland Security said on Sunday.

Paul Anthony Ciancia, 23, also discussed weaknesses in airport security in the "suicide" note before Friday's attack, Michael McCaul, the Republican congressman who chairs the committee, told CNN.

Ciancia is accused of fatally shooting a Transportation Security Administration officer, the first employee from the agency to die in the line of duty since it was created 12 years ago. Airport police shot the gunman, wounding him and ending the rampage.

"It's clearly one of those notes that reads, 'I'm going to kill people and I don't want to kill civilians,' with the idea that he's going to die at the end of this," McCaul, who said he had read the note, told CNN.

Democrats. Hillary Clinton flattered, but no decision on 2016

Hillary Clinton was flattered by an early endorsement by New York Democratic Sen. Charles Schumer but has made no decision about running for president in 2016, her office said on Sunday.

Schumer, in a speech to Democratic activists in Iowa on Saturday night, said "2016 is Hillary's time," and urged her to seek the Democratic presidential nomination.

It was the latest in a series of endorsements by Democratic leaders for the former secretary of state and former U.S. senator, who is pondering whether to run in 2016 after losing the nomination in 2008 to Barack Obama.

Morsi to go on trial as Egypt struggles to gain democracy

Egypt's first freely elected president, Mohamed Morsi, goes on trial on Monday under a security crackdown that has devastated his Muslim Brotherhood movement and raised concerns that the army-backed government is reimposing a police state.

Morsi, who was ousted by the army on July 3 after mass protests against his rule, is due to appear in court at the same Cairo police academy where autocrat Hosni Mubarak also faces trial following his own overthrow in 2011.

The popular uprising that toppled Mubarak had raised expectations that Egyptians could break the military establishment's long-standing grip on power. However, the generals are back in charge, to the dismay of Western allies who hoped Egypt's experiment with democracy would be smooth.

Morsi, who has been held in secret location since his removal after only a year in office, is due to appear along with 14 other senior Muslim Brotherhood figures on charges of inciting violence.

In the most senior visit to Cairo by a U.S. official since Morsi's fall, Secretary of State John Kerry called on Sunday for a fair, transparent trial for all Egyptians. REUTERS

Kerry sees signs of Egypt moving back toward democracy

A day before Egypt's deposed Islamist president goes on trial, U.S. Secretary of State John Kerry expressed guarded optimism on Sunday about a return to democracy in the country, as he began a tour partly aimed at easing tensions with Arab powers.

Kerry called for fair, transparent trials for all citizens. However, he described Cairo as a vital partner, apparently trying to repair relations hurt by a partial freeze in U.S. aid, pending progress on democracy.

Pakistan to assess US ties after killing of militant disrupts talks

Response. Politicians have demanded that U.S. military supply lines into Afghanistan be blocked.

Pakistan is to review its relationship with the United States, the prime minister's office said on Sunday, following the killing of the Pakistani Taliban leader in a U.S. drone strike.

But a top-level meeting to examine relations, scheduled for Sunday, was postponed at the last minute without explanation.

Hakimullah Mehsud, who had a $5 million U.S. bounty on his head, was killed on Friday in the northwestern Pakistani militant stronghold of North Waziristan, near the Afghan border.

The Pakistani Taliban have killed thousands of Pakistani civilians and members of the security forces in their bid to impose Islamist rule, but the new government has been calling for peace talks.

The government denounced Mehsud's killing as a U.S. bid to derail the talks and summoned the U.S. ambassador on Saturday to complain.

Prime Minister Nawaz Sharif's office had said he would chair a meeting on the consequences for ties with Washington. There was no indication when it might now take place.

"It is clear that the U.S. is against peace and does not want terrorism to subside. Now, we only have one agenda: to stop NATO supplies going through [the northern province of] Khyber Pakhtunkhwa," Asad Qaiser, the speaker of the provincial assembly, told Reuters. REUTERS

US lawmaker defends killing

A U.S. lawmaker whose committee oversees the intelligence community defended the drone strike that killed a Pakistani Taliban leader and said it would help keep American troops safe.

Representative Mike Rogers, who chairs the House of Representatives' permanent intelligence committee, said the slain militant, Hakimullah Mehsud, was a "bad guy" who was connected to attacks against Pakistani soldiers and to the Taliban in Afghanistan, which has forced closures of many schools for girls.

France says its journalists 'assassinated' in Mali

France said two French journalists found dead in the northern Mali region of Kidal had been "coldly assassinated" by militants and vowed to step up security measures in the area.

Radio journalists Claude Verlon and Ghislaine Dupont were abducted after interviewing a member of the MNLA Tuareg separatist group in northern Mali.

Their bodies were found on Saturday by a French patrol eight miles outside Kidal, the birthplace of a Tuareg uprising last year that plunged Mali into chaos, leading to a coup in the capital Bamako and the occupation of the northern half of the country by militants linked to al Qaeda. REUTERS

Swisscom builds 'Swiss Cloud' as spying storm rages

Swisscom is building a "Swiss Cloud" that could loosen the grip of U.S. technology giants and attract foreign companies looking for a way to shield sensitive data from the prying eyes of foreign intelligence services.

Companies are increasingly turning to cloud computing to cut costs and add flexibility to their IT departments.

But revelations that the NSA secretly gathered user data from nine big U.S. tech companies has demonstrated that privacy for users of cloud services can be compromised, and some suggest customers could seek out alternatives to the dominant U.S. providers to try and protect sensitive information.

Swisscom's head of IT services Andreas Koenig said the telecom provider's decision to set up a home cloud was unrelated to the recent NSA revelations and driven more by a desire to cut costs and make its systems more dynamic.

Still, as the technology to protect against illegal threats progresses, Koenig says it will start to make more sense to store data in locations where strict privacy laws make it harder to retrieve sensitive information. REUTERS

By the numbers

70

Koenig said Swisscom's goal was to have 70 percent of its own IT infrastructure in the cloud by 2016.

200

That's the equivalent of 200-300 petabytes of data. According to analysts, it would take 223,000 DVDs to hold just one petabyte.

Chip designers seek to profit in Bitcoin mining

New gold rush. Prospectors are using math in place of pans and pickaxes.

Bitcoin is fast becoming a well-recognized currency. / GETTY IMAGES

Tucked away in an air conditioned data center in Silicon Valley is a hodgepodge of black boxes, circuit boards and cooling fans owned by 27-year-old Aaron Jackson-Wilde, a modern-day prospector looking for Bitcoins.

Since discovering the digital currency a few months ago, Jackson-Wilde has paid about $2,000 for his "rigs," which are powered by specialized computer chips. They are designed to help operate and maintain the Bitcoin network — and, in return, generate a small reward in a process known as "Bitcoin mining."

A form of electronic money independent of traditional banking, Bitcoins started circulating in 2009 and have since become the most prominent of several fledgling digital currencies.

While they quickly gained a reputation for facilitating drug deals and money laundering, Bitcoins have of late garnered attention from investors. The volume of transactions using Bitcoins today remains miniscule, but enthusiasts believe the peer-to-peer currency will play a major role in e-commerce and could eventually become as ubiquitous as email.

Bitcoin mining is based on a unique feature of the digital currency. Unlike traditional currencies, where a central bank decides how much money to print, no central authority governs the supply of Bitcoins.

Instead, Bitcoin transactions are tracked by a network of computers that solve complex mathematical problems to validate transactions and prevent counterfeit. The system automatically generates new Bitcoins as the math problems are solved and rewards them to the computer operators.

In a key twist that keeps inflation in check, the difficulty of the cryptographic math that leads to newly minted coins grows as more computers join the network. That has led some to target a new market in souped-up computers and specialized chips aimed at the growing ranks of Bitcoin "miners." REUTERS

Quoted

"I've been in arms races throughout my career — AMD, ARM, Intel. But none of them match the intensity of Bitcoin mining. Each month in Bitcoin mining is like a year."

Ravi Iyengar, who quit his job as a senior chip architect at Samsung and raised $1.5 million to launch CoinTerra, which sells hardware meant for "mining"

DOUGLAS COUPLAND

Douglas Coupland is a Canadian writer, artist and designer. His first novel was 1991's "Generation X: Tales for an Accelerated Culture." His novella, "Temp," of which this is the first installment, will be running online and in the pages of your daily Metro each weekday through Nov. 29.

Day 1: Temp enlivens life-sucking meeting

I've learned over the years that the fastest way to bring an office to a grinding halt is simply to write "broken" on a piece of paper and tape it onto the photocopier. Staffers walk to the machine, see the sign, feel momentarily inconvenienced and then glow inwardly when they realize they can blamelessly return to their cubicles and play FreeCell and trawl the Internet for Russian dash-cam car-accident GIFs.

Greetings. My name is Shannon. I'm a temp, but more than that, I'm the future of employment in the Western world. Sure, you may have a job right now, but one day you'll be me, roving from gig to gig, no medical, no dental, no anything else except the pleasure of not having to kiss ass or put up with imbeciles or care much about things like, say, life-suckingly boring meetings of the sort I sit in at Taylor, Wagner & Kimura Filter Systems.

TWK's owners are systematically moving the company to China and everyone knows it. Pretty much once a day someone at TWK is given the ax while I, as temp goddess, casually buff my nails or stalk Facebook looking for unflattering photos of the popular kids I used to go to high school with. There used to be a full-time receptionist but she went on maternity leave. So here I am. Temp!

Dan Wagner (the Danimal), who co-owns TWK, understands my devil-may-care, low-commitment attitude. Like today when he called me in from the front. "If it's OK, young Shannon here is going to take notes on today's meeting." Dan always winks at me, which is slightly pervy but technically not actionable as harassment.

The Three Sarahs roll their eyes when Dan brings me in. Yes, you read that correctly: Sarah from Marketing, Sarah from E-commerce Strategy and Sarah from Systems. Don't get me going.

So when the meeting invariably turns into an inevitable miasma of fear and crushed dreams, Dan will say, "Shannon, give us a lift, why don't you? What's your random fun fact of the day?"

Today's fun fact: "Well, Dan, what country on Earth has the world's lowest age of consent?"

This question was just racy enough to ensure that even the Sarahs listened in.

"What country would that be, Shannon?"

"The Vatican. The age of consent there is 12."

Even the Sarahs reacted to that one.

"Seriously?"

"Wait,"
said Sarah No. 2.
"I think it might actually be 14."

"Well," said Dan, "The 13-year-olds over there must certainly be sleeping easy tonight. Shannon, thank you for bringing joy and knowledge to our universe. Phelps, you are good."

I am.

Halloween exploits of the rich and famous

Yet another Halloween weekend is over. The fishnets, wigs and fake blood have been put away, the hangover is still raging and embarrassing photos of yourself are circulating on the Internet. It was a banner year. However, there are some people who did Halloween even better than you did, and those people are, of course, celebrities. Let's see how they spent their weekend.

It's been a while since we've heard from the Madden brothers. The Good Charlotte frontmen were tabloid regulars for a bit, with Joel Madden making headlines about his dating exploits (he is Hilary Duff's ex and currently Nicole Richie's husband). Now brother Benji Madden looks like he's making up for lost time: He was spotted locking lips with Miley Cyrus at Hollywood hot spot Bootsy Bellows on Halloween, according to E! News. Cyrus was reportedly enjoying a girls' night with Kelly Osbourne and about 10 other friends, but her attention soon turned to Madden. They later left together with friends.

Meanwhile, Lindsay Lohan was spotted canoodling with engaged boxer Floyd Mayweather at a Halloween party she hosted at the Foxwoods Casino in Connecticut (that's what she should be doing — hosting a party at a casino). Mayweather was dressed as Freddy Krueger, while Lohan went as Carrie. They acted like "two old friends" and apparently booze was flowing.

Heidi Klum went to her annual Halloween party at Marquee in NYC as herself at 95, complete with wrinkles and age spots. Klum, who recently turned 40, explained to People magazine: "There was so much talk about me turning 40. ... I thought, really? I will show you old!"

Bieber visits brothel

Just days after allegedly spending the night with a prostitute in Panama, Justin Bieber was caught sneaking out of a brothel in Brazil, according to Page Six. As one of his security guards sprayed photographers with water in an effort to ward them off, others hurried the 19-year-old Canadian pop star out the front entrance hidden under a sheet bearing the logo of the brothel — though one of Bieber's many tattoos was clearly visible.

GETTY IMAGES

Stand-up shows are opportunities for comics to air their complaints and grievances — or at least the complaints and grievances they have at the moment.

"By the time you write it, film it, edit and get it in the hands of the Netflix people, it ends up being a long time," says Aziz Ansari, whose latest stand-up special, "Buried Alive," hit the streaming giant last Thursday.

The tour happened last spring and summer, but he says he still generally believes what he said about turning 30 and not yet wanting to marry, have kids or settle down. "Definitely my views have changed a little bit here and there. I still have that fear, but I think I'm more comfortable with the idea of waiting and doing the stuff later in life — as long as there's reason to do it."

The show brings him to Netflix, which has become a heavyweight in terms of premiering new material, like the original series "House of Cards," "Derek" and "Orange is the New Black." "I think Netflix is one of the few outlets we have where people get to watch things the way they like to," he says. "I've done every kind of method of releasing material — say, releasing it for $5."

The comedy scene has been rocked by controversies over the last year, such as Daniel Tosh's off-the-cuff rape joke during a show. "I think you have to take that all case by case," Ansari maintains. "I'm sure if you take my things out of context, you can make me seem like a horrible person, too." In "Buried Alive," he skirts that fine line with a joke about pedophiles. "Ultimately that joke is about how I'd be scared to have a kid. I would be so scared for the safety of my kids. That's the scariest part of that, how parents let their kids run around the mall by themselves."

Brooks Brothers boy

Television personality

Ansari isn't convinced there's a ton of crossover between his "Parks and Recreation" gig, now in its sixth season, and his stand-up shows. He does admit the role — as irrepressibly boyish Tom Haverford — was tailored for him, as the other characters were for the rest of the cast.

"They grab elements from my real life. There are elements of all our personal lives on the show," he admits. He has wider musical taste than Tom, though. "I listen to rock music. I listen to plenty of rap, but I like rock. My tastes are pretty across the board."

Quoted

"I think I'm more comfortable with the idea of waiting and doing the stuff later in life — as long as there's reason to do it."

The Beverly Hills ladies bring the drama tonight. / BRAVO

REALITY

'The Real Housewives of Beverly Hills'

The Bev Hills ladies return for a fourth season that, if the promos are any indication, should be filled with the most drama and catfighting among ladies in couture that costs more than six months of rent for some of our apartments. This season, two new wives join the cast. Spoiler alert: One of them is a witch, maybe. Want more spoilers? Turn to pages 14 and 15 for interviews with two of the cast members.

SEASON PREMIERE, 8 P.M., BRAVO

REALITY

'The Real Housewives of Miami'

As we say hello again to the B.H. wives, we say adios to the far spicier Miami cast. In the third season finale, the question of whether Roman — who, frankly, seems like a major creep — will actually make an honest woman of Joanna is answered. Oh God, the suspense!

RODOLFO MARTINEZ/BRAVO

CARLTON GEBBIA

A NEW HOUSEWIFE GETS 'REAL'

When Carlton Gebbia decided to join the cast of "The Real Housewives of Beverly Hills"(the fourth season premieres tonight on Bravo), she sat down with her two daughters to watch a few episodes of the show. Having never watched reality TV before, Gebbia's toes began to curl with every outrageous comment and fake smile that flashed on the screen. The London-bred former actress may have a net worth somewhere around $50 million but, if you ask her, the Rob Zombie-listening, Wicca-practicing mother of three isn't your typical housewife.

Did you have reservations about putting your family on TV?
Oh definitely! I did toy with the idea of not doing it. I sat down with my husband and kiddies and hashed things out. I told them, "There will probably be moments that you will see on TV, or hear about, where I behave badly or make mistakes. But I will not have any regrets about it, because it's my reality and I will be OK with that."

In the Season 4 trailer, Kyle Richards rattles you with a comment about you being a witch.
That clip was the culmination of a whole series of insults, disrespectful behavior and bigotry that she hides behind her incessant laugh. It wasn't just that moment that everything exploded, it was a gradual process of signals that I kept getting from her.

Tell us about your faith. Are you a witch?
My grandmother was a Pagan. I've been brought up in that lifestyle. I practice witchcraft. My faith has taken traditions from Wicca that I have individualized for myself. And let me tell you, it's one of the most harmonious religions out there. It's all connected and revolves around Mother Earth and having respect for the universe.

I absolutely love music, so I can appreciate all genres. But I love Rob Zombie, I love Slash — I'm happy to call him a friend. Oh yes, and Sean from Slipknot.

Is Kim Richards as crazy as she has previously appeared?
[Laughs] I had a really great time with her in Palm Springs. We're both in our element, feeding these wild squirrels. Then she does a gesture where she's in a very spiritual moment with herself. ... She just gets down on her knees and gives thanks. It was a very odd place to get down your knees, but I guess that's Kim. I like her.

Reality TV. Kyle Richards dishes on 'Housewives' drama

There was a time when Kyle Richards was best known for being Paris Hilton's aunt. These days, she's a personality in her own right. We got Richards (who apparently hasn't won any favor with Carlton Gebbia) on the line to talk about all the drama.

"The Real Housewives of Beverly Hills" premieres tonight at 8 p.m. / RODOLFO MARTINEZ, BRAVO

How much of the drama is real, and how much is put on for the cameras?
Unfortunately, all of it's real. I wish I could say that it was scripted, because it would make my life a lot easier! First of all, they choose women who have very strong personalities and are very opinionated. Then the whole backstory you don't see is that it becomes a competition. Some of the women ... try to take any opportunity they can to make another woman not look good.

"Reality" TV is sort of a misnomer. How much of your show would you admit is "real"?
I think there are a lot of misconceptions about reality television. One is I think people think that the cameras are there from the minute I wake up to the minute I go to bed at night. But that's not the case. As far as things being real or not real, ours is very real.

Have you met all the other "Housewives"?
I think almost everybody.

Maybe you can answer this then: Who's your favorite of any cast?
NeNe Leakes. She's fun. She makes me laugh.

What's one thing about the show people probably don't know?
That, sometimes, as bad as you think it is, it's even worse behind the camera! [Laughs] I guess I'd say that.

THE JET SET: WATCH ATTRACTIVE EUROPEANS GET BORED

Handsome, well-dressed, bored Europeans were all over screens in the early 1960s, many of them in the films of Michelangelo Antonioni. Starting with "L'Avventura," the Italian filmmaker made what was loosely called the "trilogy of alienation." In these, pretty actors — among them, Monica Vitti, Alain Delon and Gabriele Ferzetti — wandered underpopulated cities, struggling to feel anything.

In 1961's "La Notte," Marcello Mastroianni and Jeanne Moreau play a longtime couple who attempt a date night. But they wind up at a party where they try to hook up with others, including the hot daughter of an industrialist (Vitti).

There's another movie going on in "La Notte," a more spirited one in which our leads are younger and madly in love. We only get glimpses of this, in dialogue and in them revisiting places they used to frequent. Watching it is like watching "Before Midnight," but not "Before Sunrise" or "Before Sunset." They say they once loved each other, but they can't for the life of them remember why.

"La Notte" goes hi-def.

Of the dueling "'Die Hard' in the White House" pictures this year, "Olympus Has Fallen" won, while the super-budgeted "White House Down" tanked. It's not great, but the latest from "Independence Day"'s Roland Emmerich is cheerfully ridiculous, with a deadpan Channing Tatum as its Bruce Willis.

SUMMIT ENTERTAINMENT

"Ender's Game," the futuristic story of children forced to fight an enemy race, battled to the top of box office charts in the United States and Canada, defeating senior citizen buddy comedy "Last Vegas" and animated turkey toon "Free Birds."

Based on the best-selling 1985 sci-fi novel by anti-gay activist Orson Scott Card, "Ender's Game" collected $28 million in ticket sales over its first three days, according to studio estimates released on Sunday.

Raunchy comedy "Jackass Presents: Bad Grandpa," which topped last weekend's charts, dropped to second place with $20.5 million. "Last Vegas" debuted in the No. 3 spot, grabbing $16.5 million.

"Free Birds," featuring the voices of Owen Wilson and Woody Harrelson, debuted in fourth place, ringing up $16.2 million at North American theaters. The 3-D movie tells the story of two turkeys that travel back in time to stop the birds from becoming the main course at Thanksgiving dinner.

Rounding out the charts, 3-D space thriller "Gravity" pulled in $13.1 million. As of this weekend, the movie's worldwide total has topped $425 million. REUTERS

'Tis the season

What are the differences between fall and spring allergies?

See more at www.metro.us

Achoo! The same symptoms have different triggers.

Spring and fall allergies have the same symptoms: sneezing, runny nose, itchy or watery eyes, headache, sinus pain and pressure, plus increased asthma symptoms. However, triggers differ and, according to ENT & Allergy Associates' Dr. Milo F. Vassallo, airborne allergens can worsen in fall.

"There can be far more culprits in fall," says Vassallo, a pediatric and adult allergist and immunologist who practices in New York. "Overall, in spring, outdoor allergens are mainly tree pollens and, in the fall, it's weed pollens, like ragweed. That's also complicated by molds, which [grow in] early fall's warm, wet weather."

No matter what the season, for most people, dealing with allergies means avoiding triggers. "Limit exposure," Vassallo recommends. "Keep windows closed from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. In the yard, wear a mask to rake leaves."

And don't forget about indoor allergens.

"In late fall, when the weather gets colder, people close their windows and seal up their home. They pull out old comforters and quilts. Then, the dust mite problem escalates, and even sensitivities to their pets worsen. As I often say, people are potentially sleeping with the enemy."

One piece of good news for allergy sufferers is that cold weather stops the outdoor triggers: "By first frost," Vassallo says, "weed pollens and molds have ceased."

Long-term, however, the ragweed season might be lengthening due to a rise in temperatures and carbon dioxide in the atmosphere, says the American Academy of Allergy, Asthma and Immunology.

"It's complex; there are multiple factors," says Vassallo. "But unfortunately, it's not looking good for allergies in general."

Treat yours

Don't fear the needle

Allergy treatment varies from over-the-counter medicines to ease symptoms to sitting down with an allergist to create a treatment plan, such as immunotherapy, for long-term relief. Immunotherapy works similarly to homeopathy.

"Shots can prevent allergies to airborne allergens very effectively and are an excellent long-term preventative solution," says Vassallo. "We start with extraordinarily small amounts of the pollen and build to a therapeutic dose. It retrains the immune system and people can start looking forward to fall."

Inside the furry suit: St. Joseph's Hawk

Wingspan. Ian Klinger might get hot in the costume, but for a free ride he doesn't mind flapping his wings for a few hours.

The benefits of wearing a furry suit can be ephemeral — a little love from the kids, photos and adoration are usually the kinds of things mascots are going for. At St. Joseph's University in Philadelphia, Ian Klinger dons the flashy Hawk costume at games, charity events and even weddings for alumni in exchange for the ultimate payoff: free tuition.

How did you find out about the St. Joe's Hawk?
I was a manager [for the basketball team] so I'd come to practice and help out as a sophomore, so I was around the program.

Ian Klinger shakes a feather (and some fur) on the court. / PROVIDED

I knew the Hawk coming here — it's everywhere at St. Joe's. I figured, why not just dive in and have a good time? If it happens, it happens.

With student debt up in the trillions, was there a lot of competition to get the gig?
Yeah, it's pretty nuts. Basically, they bring everyone out and they ask you to stand and basically start flapping. [Laughs] No, I'm kidding. It's basically just an interview, like any job interview process.

What are your favorite events to attend?
I really do love doing the games. Any big games, or any home game is exciting. Also, the weddings where there are a ton of St. Joe's people are fun; I've done weddings where they actually put me up in hotels for the night. Then, at the service events, it's always cool to be in the suit and interact with the kids, so that's always a good time.

What do you feel is your duty as the Hawk?
On a more serious note, it does have a bigger symbol and it represents the university as a figurehead. It's something that's a leadership role on campus, and I have to manage my grades with the schedule. The Hawk needs to be someone that can sit down and hold a conversation with alumni. I've met a lot of cool alumni and I get to talk to them through this position, which is awesome.

Have you ever worn the suit at a non-university-sanctioned event, like for fun at a party?
No, I haven't. I wear it so much I don't want to be in it any more than I have to. It doesn't smell very great, so it's not a very enticing costume. It's not going to get me anywhere.

Wedded bliss

You got down on the dance floor at a wedding that I attended and you were a pretty big hit.

That day was crazy; I think I did five appearances that day between stuff on campus and then I did another wedding downtown. By the time I got there, everyone was a little lubricated.

Nerds for hire help small businesses

Meet Pat Petitti, a 29-year-old co-founder of the Boston-based startup Hourly Nerd, which connects small-business owners with MBA students who offer consulting services. As part of their course work as students at Harvard's MBA program, Petitti and four classmates were tasked with creating a business.

Petitti recalls the birth of their "baby" — a co-founder's father is a small-business owner who asked his son for help with Excel. Petitti says that the Excel work that co-founder Rob Biederman whipped up in minutes would take Biederman's father a whole day's work or more. Their start-up, Hourly Nerd, connects the dots for small-business owners seeking project assistance to tap into MBA students' abilities.

After the Hourly Nerds created the website, MBA students and alumni were able to submit their résumés online, but the master nerds had to navigate a road block: Per class rules, students couldn't recruit fellow Harvard MBAs until the end of their first school year. Instead, they plugged the site at other MBA programs' career development offices as a chance for students to beef up their résumés.

"MBA students often go into [programs] to switch industries. It's really hard to do if you don't have experience," Petitti says. "You can put this experience on a résumé." Plus, he says, students can make some cash.

Hourly Nerd makes money as well — they get a cut of each transaction. Typically, projects range from a few hundred to a few thousand dollars.

As for building up their own Benjamins with investors, the founders spoke to the TV show "Shark Tank," but Petitti says it didn't make sense for the company. One of them suggested going directly to the show's star, investor Mark Cuban.

"We had zero expectations, but he understands small businesses. I think it was less than 10 minutes later; he responded with a list of questions and said he was interested." And $450,000 later, he's among the investors.

The foursome plans to work full-time at Hourly Nerd after graduating in May. They did consider dropping out, but ended up nixing the idea.

Oh yeah, their project aced the grade. On a scale of three, (with one being the best), they scored a one.

Advice

Four tips for aspiring entrepreneurs

1 Just do it. "Spend less time thinking about the right approach, theorizing and strategizing. Just execute."

2 Don't fly solo. "I would probably get 50 percent of the decisions wrong [on my own] but because I'm working with people whose opinions I really respect and value, we're able to make all of the decisions as a group."

3 Work with friends and family. "My three MBA co-founders are three of my best friends at Harvard; our CTO is my cousin. We can be extremely transparent with each other."

4 Ask for advice and make it your own. "Everyone has an opinion, but being able to take the different perspectives and dilute it down to what is right for your business is the trick."

Waving bye-bye to bulletin boards

Tech. A new location-based app seeks to let students know what's happening around campus.

Campus Quad wants to put the "pulse" of the college community in the hands of students. / DIGITAL VISION

College campuses can be big, bad, scary places, particularly for freshmen. Campus Quad aims to help students find their place using tools already at their disposal — smartphones.

"I just can't believe students are still communicating with paper fliers," founder and chief executive officer Frances Cairns said in an interview with VentureBeat. "Universities are communities driven by shared interests. I wanted to build something that gave students a voice and the ability to take back and navigate their college experience."

The mobile app contains location-based postings from students and university organizations about campus activities. The goal is to put the "pulse of the community" in their hands so students can stay on top of what is going on around them, follow their interests and communicate with fellow students.

It brings the social-local-mobile trend to campuses, which still rely primarily on antiquated paper fliers, bulletin boards and word-of-mouth to publicize events.

Cairns spent years working as an administrator in higher education and then transitioned over to the ed-tech world, where she held senior roles at Adobe, Apple and Dell, working on strategy for their educational products. Before Campus Quad, she founded a tech startup called Inkstone with former colleagues, where they created e-reader apps.

On one fateful trip to a college campus, she realized that all the students were on mobile phones, but the information they needed to take advantage of college was not.

Campus Quad lets anyone post photos, events, classified ads and coupons, and anyone can post. Sure, there is value in helping students meet like-minded people, find organizations of interest and enhance their sense of community, but the value is also in preparing students for careers.

Extracurricular activities can matter just as much as academics for new grads. Campus Quad aims to empower students to take greater control over extracurriculars and decrease the missed opportunities from "not knowing." Students can track specific jobs or industries and connect with alumni, and Cairns says these things could improve matriculation and graduation rates and also job possibilities.

An alarming 44 percent of young college grads are unemployed or underemployed. Much blame has been placed on traditional institutions for not preparing students for the "real world." Campus Quad also collects information on students' habits and helps schools assess the effectiveness of their student services using data. Cairns says the main goal is social intelligence and creating a digital network that reflects the physical campus.

Tips for recruiters

Choose wisely

Remember who you're recruiting — students or seasoned professionals — and gear up accordingly. Career fair giveaways, according to organizers and attendees, still include the usual customized pens, water bottles and tote bags. A more thoughtful option can be something digital, like a free iTunes download or an e-book that allows you to follow up with a job candidate. Items that are useful, unique and initiate a dialogue between you and a potential employee will be the ones he or she remembers. Think customized designs for T-shirts, a toy or maybe even a bottle of hot sauce. Don't think of it as a waste of money — there is no shortage of recent college grads looking for work. And a little low-cost (high-spice) advertising never hurt anyone.

Seeking employment (and free stuff)

Swag. Frisbees and pens are things of the past as job fairs dole out brand-name T-shirts and even hot sauce.

While plenty of companies still provide giveaways at career fairs across the country, the nature of customized freebies may be changing.

This fall, vendors at a Brown University job fair gave away everything from the usual customized pens and stress balls to bottles of hot sauce, according to Caitlin Dorman. A sophomore, Dorman chronicled her career fair adventure in a blog post for Brown's Daily Herald in September.

In an effort to be memorable and useful, companies gave away high-end T-shirts, toys and tech gadgets.

Dorman received a credit card processor from Square Up and scored Play-Doh samples and My Little Pony figurines from Hasbro that were up for grabs for the enterprising student job-seeker.

So what kind of impact do these freebies have on students?

"All I know is that I have a lot of cups for when my friends come over," she says. The Square Up device was of little use. "I haven't tried out that thing yet because I don't make any money."

Dorman says she doesn't feel more drawn to work for companies because of the free swag.

That sentiment may be an argument for sticking to the basics, which is exactly what companies attending the Tech Career Expo in Austin, Texas, tend to do. Tim Williams, vice president of sales and marketing, says that companies at the Tech Expo often just give away pens, stress balls and T-shirts.

"T-shirts are always a great idea," he says. "Software developers seem to love T-shirts."

Few ventured into the land of interactive giveaways. However, Nike, Inc. gave out postcards with a QR code that linked to a Web page with open positions, as well as another card that could be redeemed for a free drink at a local watering hole, Williams says.

Both electronic giveaways and the standard T-shirt are good options, according to Thursday Bram, consultant and founder at Hyper Modern Writing.

"One of the reasons I like using an e-book or another digital item is because there are a lot of options for tracking engagement," Bram writes. "For instance, I might build a job application into the e-book I offered to create a seamless way for a prospect to follow up with me after reading the e-book."

T-shirts are still good options, she writes, if companies are willing to go the extra mile and create a custom design and print women's T-shirts.

"It shows an added awareness of the diversity in your audience too," she says.

What to wear for a career fair

Experts. We asked fashionistas for their input on making the right statement.

This week, students at the Fashion Institute of Technology gathered for their annual career fair. They did some things that most job seekers are discouraged from doing at career fairs — they chose ensembles that made statements and showed off their personalities.

"It's one thing to dress professionally … but we encourage students to think about their complete presentation," says Patti Choy, a career counselor at FIT.

Students' attire ranged from street wear to business attire with a twist, Choy says. The topic of what to wear to interviews is a constant conversation. Choy works to find a middle ground that reflects students' personalities and is affordable.

"[If] they have a certain eye, they can really work a look based on their budget constraints," she says.

The college environment combined with the fashion and design atmosphere gives them a little leeway when it comes to career fair formalities. Plus, the snazzy portfolios the students carry around tend to add polish to their appearance.

Stand out in a sea of suits. / DIGITAL VISION

But, let's face it: Most of us are not attending job fairs in fashion. So what can we do to create some bulletproof outfits that are professional without falling flat? We checked in with Holly Thomas, an editor at Refinery29, for some dos and don'ts.

"It's really important to know that a job interview or career fair is not the time to experiment," Thomas says. "Give [the outfit] a dry run; wear it the day before," she says.

This doesn't mean you have to be bored with your getup though. A great necklace, printed scarf or jewel-toned blouse can add personality, Thomas says. She also recommends adjusting your style to fit the type of company you're applying to.

"Maybe you're applying for a job working with a graphic design firm. In that case you can wear a bright red blazer," she says. That is, of course, if you're comfortable wearing bold colors — being comfortable is critical when you're putting yourself in the spotlight, she adds.

Thomas recommends a pocket square or beautiful red satchel as appropriate ways to spruce up for an interview at a more conservative company, perhaps with a law firm.

For those of us who just aren't sure where to start, Thomas recommends working with the ultimate weapon: a tailor.

"The best advice in any situation when you're out of your depth is to call an expert — get a great tailor," she says. "Have one suit that's been tailored that fits your body; spend a little bit of money to have it customized."

Advice

More tips from Holly Thomas

- Resist the urge to break in those new pumps. "A career fair is not the time to try something you've never worn before," she says. Keep several tried-and-true outfits ready that you know work for you and that you can pull at a moment's notice.
- "Don't be afraid of an iron," she says. "Everything should be clean and pressed."
- And while it's clean, keep it that way. "Don't eat or drink anything messy on the way."
- "Make sure that everything fits, that you feel comfortable, that you feel like yourself and that you're keeping an eye to the industry you want to work in."
- Don't think of dressing professionally as stifling yourself. "There's plenty of time for self-expression when you're not working. Focus on getting a good job."

Government: The newest charity case

Re: 'Top Obamacare official apologizes for "debacle"' (Metro, Oct. 31)
In your article you state: "[Sebelius] has apologized for the botched rollout of the governments's health care website." It would be wonderful if top Web companies such as Facebook and Google donated programmers' time to help the administration solve its programming problems. Time, not money, is needed.
DINA SCHLESINGER, VIA EMAIL

Promises were broken, so who's to blame? The GOP? They sat on their a— just to watch and see what happens. Thousands of people lost their health insurance because of Obamacare. No one really spoke out because that would be racist. Obama promises again "to get the site fixed." Let's all see what happens again. I'll bet anyone dollars to doughnuts that this promise, once again, will be broken.
JIM ALVIN, VIA EMAIL

'Nanette' isn't the Red Sox culprit

Metro has perpetuated a long-standing myth that "No No Nanette" was somehow related to the failure of the Red Sox during Harry Frazee's tenure as owner. The Red Sox and Frazee sold Babe Ruth to the Yankees after the 1918 season, and the money was used to finance the show "My Lady Friends," which debuted in December 1919. While it is true that "No No Nanette" is a musical adaptation of "Our Lady Friends," "Nanette" didn't debut until 1924, and that was in Chicago rather than Broadway. The Red Sox had already plunged into the American League cellar in 1922, where they would remain for the rest of the decade.

Foles matches touchdown record, posts perfect rating

NFL. Eagles quarterback Nick Foles chucked seven TDs in 49-20 win over Raiders.

Nick Foles may have won the Eagles starting job permanently after a masterful performance yesterday. / GETTY IMAGES

That may be the end of Mike Vick's Philadelphia Eagles career.

Nick Foles put on a show for the ages in yesterday's 49-20 win in Oakland. Guiding Chip Kelly's up-tempo offense, the second-year quarterback was phenomenal in his return from a concussion. Foles went 22-of-28 for 407 yards and tied an NFL record with seven touchdown passes, three to Riley Cooper. His 158.3 QB rating was perfect.

The performance was so impressive that the FOX broadcast team couldn't stop with the compliments. The cameras continually panned to Vick standing in street clothes on the sideline. At one point, they showed an Eagles fan wearing a No. 9 Jim McMahon jersey and the play-by-play announcer said, "You're going to be seeing a lot of Nick Foles jerseys in Philadelphia ... a different name on the back of those No. 9 jerseys."

By the numbers

Nick Foles posted the 50th perfect single-game rating (158.3) since the AFL-NFL merger in 1970. Robert Griffin III was the last to do it — against the Eagles on Nov. 18, 2012.

When Foles hit Brent Celek on a 2-yard touchdown on the Eagles' opening drive, a historic day was set in motion. The play, set up by a 42-yard strike to Cooper, broke a nine-quarter scoreless streak. Kelly's offense, which had been coming under fire in recent weeks, looked like the version that opened the season in Washington. The unit used a lot of two tight-end sets and rarely huddled, forcing the pace on a tired Raiders defense.

The Eagles' offense finished with 542 yards — 414 of them through the air — and 21 first downs. They were also perfect in the red zone, going 4-for-4, after entering the contest as the second-worst team in the NFL in red-zone efficiency.

Will Foles be the Eagles' permanent starter moving forward? Kelly will likely play the usual cat-and-mouse game with reporters this week, but the answer is pretty obvious. Foles, who was lifted for Matt Barkley in the fourth quarter, had more touchdown tosses in one game than Vick has all season.

Ruben Amaro's inability to put together a bullpen has hurt the Phillies. / GETTY IMAGES

Can Phils finally get it right?

MLB. Ruben Amaro has a poor track record in recent offseasons trying to fix the Phillies.

How the mighty have fallen, at least according to Las Vegas.

The Phillies are 33-1 shots, according to Bovada, to win the 2014 World Series.

Granted, the hot stove has yet to get warm. The Phillies will lose some salary, most notably Roy Halladay's $20 million. According to Ruben Amaro, the Phillies are looking to sign an outfielder, possibly a starter and a number of bullpen arms.

"But do you have faith that Amaro will get it right this offseason?" an NL scout asked. "What has Amaro accomplished over the last few seasons? He doesn't exactly inspire confidence."

Amaro has not in fact earned high marks the last few offseasons. To bolster the bullpen after the 2011 season, he signed Jonathan Papelbon and Chad Qualls. The former was inked to a $50 million deal and no longer has a knockout pitch. The latter had good stats in two ballparks, San Diego and San Francisco, in 2012; but his numbers in Philadelphia were historically bad.

Last year, he added Mike Adams, who didn't work out. Amaro failed to promote Jason Grilli, who was lights out at Lehigh Valley. Pittsburgh claimed the journeyman reliever and he became an All-Star closer.

The Phillies also need an infusion of offense. The bats were moribund for much of 2013, particularly with runners in scoring position.

It's evident why the Phillies aren't viewed as contenders. It's not going to be easy, but teams have turned it around.

"A lot will have to go right for the Phillies to have that kind of turnaround," the NL scout said. "Right now, I agree with what Vegas says."

Can't spell relief

"What difference does it make having Cliff Lee and Cole Hamels if the Phillies can't close out the last two or three innings?"

Around the NFL

- Jets 26, Saints 20
Maybe it's time to admit the Jets are for real. Rex Ryan's team improved to 5-4, thanks to four field goals from Nick Folk and stellar play on defense. Demario Davis and Antonio Cromartie both recorded interceptions, while Chris Ivory ran for 139 yards.

- Cowboys 27, Vikings 23
Dallas had another dramatic ending; this time it was Tony Romo playing the role of hero after he hit Dwayne Harris on a 7-yard touchdown with 35 seconds left. Romo went 34-of-51 for 337 yards and two touchdowns, with Jason Witten hauling in eight balls for 102 yards. Adrian Peterson racked up 140 yards on the ground.

- Redskins 30, Chargers 24
Darrel Young found the end zone three times, including the game-winner on a 4-yard dash in overtime. He entered yesterday's game with just two touches on the season. The Chargers had a chance to win at the end of regulation, but settled for a game-tying field goal at the 1-yard line.

Drew Brees and the Saints suffered a major upset yesterday from the Jets in New Jersey. / GETTY IMAGES

- Panthers 34, Falcons 10
Once Cam Newton got going, it was scary. The Panthers QB started slow, then reeled off 20 unanswered points in the second half, including a 8-yard touchdown run. Newton also threw a 14-yard touchdown to Greg Olsen. The Falcons struggled without star wideouts Roddy White and Julio Jones. Tony Gonzalez led the way with six catches for 81 yards and a score.

- Chiefs 23, Bills 13
Yes, Andy Reid's Chiefs are still unbeaten. They held off an early scare from Buffalo, reyling on their defense to get them going. Tamba Hali's 11-yard fumble with 12:47 remaining, coupled with Sean Smith's interception return for a touchdown, improved Kansas City to 9-0. The Bills had a season-best 470 yards of total offense in the loss.

- Titans 28, Rams 21
St. Louis coach Jeff Fisher couldn't get a win against his old team. Instead, he watched Chris Johnson run for 150 yards and two touchdowns. The Titans snapped a three-game losing streak.

- Seahawks 27, Bucs 24
Seattle needed overtime to knock off Tampa Bay. The Seahawks erased a 21-point deficit to win it, the largest in franchise history — and the team's 8-1 start is the best in franchise history.

CARFAX VEHICLE HISTORY REPORTS

Sixers looking for 4-0 start to season

NBA. Michael Carter-Williams is leading the way for the upstart Sixers, who are hosting the Warriors tonight.

Keep telling the Sixers they can't win or they won't win.

They don't care. They intend to keep winning. The Sixers are 3-0 after back-to-back wins over the Wizards and Bulls this past weekend. One more victory and the team will have its best start since 2000-01.

"We understand what everybody has said and written about us," coach Brett Brown said. "Our guys have put in the day-to-day stuff, which has always been our message. I'm lucky I've found a group that enjoys each other's company, and they enjoy playing together."

Leading the way has been electric rookie point guard Michael Carter-Williams. He scored 26 points and added 10 assists in Saturday's 107-104 win over Chicago. Carter-Williams has two double-doubles and is averaging 20.7 points in his first three contests.

"Coach gives me a lot of confidence out there," Carter-Williams said. "I'm able to play freely and I just try to make things happen within the team."

The Sixers host the Golden State Warriors today (7 p.m., CSN). It will mark the return of former Sixers swingman Andre Iguodala, who is in his first season with the Warriors. METRO

Michael Carter-Williams is averaging 20.7 points per game. / GETTY IMAGES

What to watch

The Sixers will have to stop Warriors guard Stephen Curry. Here's what he's done in three games.

- Curry went 9-of-14 from the three-point line last Thursday and finished with 38 points in 38 minutes.
- He followed that up by scoring 22 points (8-of-13) in a 98-87 victory Saturday night.
